

AN ARMY'S MARCH.—General Sherman's army, in its last march to meet Johnston, would, if it occupied a single road, require 125 miles of road to stretch itself upon. The wagon trains of this army cannot march on less than forty miles of road. Its batteries will cover seven miles, its ambulances five. It carries 1,800,000 rations of bread, the same amount of sugar, and the same of salt. Eight hundred wagon loads bread and 3,600,000 rations of coffee are provided for the trip, and for a few days' rations of salt meat, 375,000 pounds are deemed a fair allowance. The single item of ammunition requires one thousand wagons—a train of itself nearly twenty miles long. The men, in fours, could not march when well closed up on less than twenty five miles of road. Two thousand five hundred pack mules follow its regiments. And these calculations do not include the intervals between different commands nor allow anything for the great gaps which any slight delay will make in a moving column.—Exchange.

From the Richmond Whig of Wednesday last we learn that General Echols has surrendered the forces that were under his command in Southwestern Virginia; and that Giltner's men also surrendered and were paroled to return to their homes. Basil Duke, with the greater portion of his command, has left Eastern Tennessee, with the intention of crossing the Mississippi, into Arkansas. Vaughn, with his irregulars, is still at large. Early is in Lynchburg, confined to his bed from an attack of rheumatism. The enlistment of negroes for military service at Richmond has ceased under the general order from the War Department to stop all further recruiting.

The Washington Chronicle in speaking of the radical outpourings of some of the Northern ultras, says:

"The ringleaders of a revolt may be punished without disrupting society. Their estates may be forfeited, and society will be left with ample means to feed and clothe their innocent children; but to confiscate the property of a whole people, to make them all beggars, is a proposition which could only be entertained by a barbarian conqueror, and to propose it in this age and country, is to rave like a madman."

An arrival from Newbern, N. C., reports that General Howard's column of General Stoneman's army, consisting of the fifteenth and seventeenth corps, commenced their overland march from Raleigh, N. C., for Alexandria, Va., via Petersburg and Richmond, on last Saturday. The Fourteenth and Twentieth Corps, under Gen. Slocum, were expected soon to follow, whilst the Tenth and Twenty-third corps, commanded by General Schofield, would remain in North Carolina for the present.

Immediately before the news of the evacuation at Richmond was received at Frankfort, United States five-twenties were quoted at 62. From this point they rose almost instantly to 65½, and afterwards as high as 69; small investors and speculators rushing eagerly into the investment at the highest figure.

The Washington Republican says that while some insist that a plot was on foot to burn the city of Philadelphia last Monday, it is stated by others that the alarm was a scheme of certain prize fighters to engage the police in guarding the city so earnestly that they would not go out to interfere with a "mill," which was to take place in the suburbs.

The Richmond Whig, whose motto was sic semper tyrannis, has stopped it at the request of the Provost Marshal General.

The Anti-Slavery Constitutional amendment has been ratified, by a unanimous vote, by the Connecticut legislature.

John Bell, of Tenn., is not dead, as recently reported; but intends to return to his home in Nashville.
